25X1 On 14 July 1953 Chinese Communist troops returned to the mainland from Peishuang (N 26-44, E 120-22) Island with 42 civilian residents of the island.¹ While on the mainland the residents of Peishuang were treated well by the Communists. They were instructed to return to Peishuang and to tell any personnel of the North Fukien Anti-Communist National Salvation Army encountered on the island that the Communists would guarantee the personal safety of those who surrendered. The Peishuang residents were also cautioned that the entire family of any civilian who concealed guerrilla personnel would be killed. After each of the civilians had received between JMP 100,000 and JMP 150,000, all of the group, except the village leader, LIU I-kuang (0491/1355/0342), returned to Peishuang on 26 and 27 July.² In mid-August, after the return of this group from the mainland, approximately 30 civilian residents were going to the mainland each day from Peishuang.³
